

-Setting the Tempo for Success-
Presented by Paul Vitale - July 13, 2016

Be Inviting and Accessible to Those Knocking – The offering of time and attention to others through an approachable manner is of great significance when setting an effective tone. Though there are seemingly never enough hours in a day, pausing long enough to engage in meaningful dialog builds bonds that serve the overall team well, while encouraging a collaborative climate that is gratifying for all.

Be Purposeful and Consistent with What's Offered – Living more intentionally not only brings greater depth to oneself, it demonstrates an example to others worth following. If you offer it, embrace it and be well prepared to move forward with a focused action plan. Being purposeful and consistent are two points of difference that promote trustworthiness and satisfaction in the minds of each individual with whom you interact.

Be a Loyal and Dependable Champion for Others – Everyone is in need of someone to give them a boost; reinforcement that the actions and ideas being considered are worthy of implementation. When given the opportunity to champion others, considering their uncertainties gives rise to seeing our own – delivering self-improvement along the way. By taking the stance of reinforcing others through sincere feedback and positive suggestions, an unexpected measure of success is achieved.

Be Self-Aware and Tolerant of Life's Inconveniences – It's not if, but when...and when the "when" arrives, it's your perspective that will either move you through it or stifle you within it. Prepare to be inconvenienced around most turns. However, be grateful for the wealth of knowledge learned. Thanks to these experiences lived, others will be the true benefactors of your teachable lessons. Remember, you can become bitter or you can become better.

Be a Sparkplug of Optimism and Enthusiasm – We are given opportunities every day to interact with others either positively or negatively. Throughout these dealings, staying on a positive course offers by far the greatest chance of success – even when offering encouragement is difficult or rejected. Making a habit of demonstrating kindness and empathy, sharing excitement for others' achievements, and offering positive solutions to negative situations will establish a pattern of unwavering success.
